

ON DUTY POLICE OFFICER DEATHS ACROSS CANADA (1962-2022)

A number of police force leaders and police association representatives have claimed in recent days that the deaths of five on duty police officers across Canada this past year – Toronto Police Service Constable Andrew Hong (September 12), South Simcoe Police Service constables Morgan Russell and Devon Northrup (October 12), Burnaby Royal Canadian Mounted Police Officer Shaelyn Yang (October 18), and Ontario Provincial Police Constable Grzegorz Pierzchala (December 27) – illustrate the “growing wave of violence” police officers face and “unprecedented” threat to their lives. This resource, which was created by the Criminalization and Punishment Education Project (CPEP), documents how many police officers have died across Canada from 1962 to 2022.* According to our analysis, 16 on duty police officers died in both 1962 and 1968, which marked the highest recorded annual levels of such deaths in Canada during the period examined for which data is available. Taking a longer view, this CPEP resource also shows that on duty police officer deaths in Canada have declined decade-over-decade over the past forty years, which cast doubts on claims made by policing professionals in recent days about the increasing dangers police officers face and also raises questions about associated statements they have made, including whether the measures they have proposed to prevent on duty police officer deaths in the future (e.g. more restrictive bail and harsher sentencing regimes) are evidence-based. In a context where the Canadian carceral state continues to expand resources for policing and imprisonment despite calls to defund such practices and the deadly outcomes associated with them for both people subject to criminalization and officers, CPEP asserts that choosing real safety for all requires evidence-based efforts to build communities, not more investments in costly and ineffective punitive injustice system measures that will continue to cost people their lives.

* The information upon which this resource is based was originally compiled via an analysis of police force and association “honour roll” webpages and pamphlets by Matthew Ferguson (PhD Candidate, Criminology, University of Ottawa) as part his doctoral thesis examining the origins, development, and significance of the Canadian Police and Peace Officers Memorial. This research is being supervised by Justin Piché (Associate Professor, Criminology, University of Ottawa | Member, Criminalization and Punishment Education Project). One limitation of the information compiled and analysed is that it does not include the cause of death for each police officer listed below, nor does it include police officers who died in circumstances not currently recognized by the Canadian Police and Peace Officers Memorial, such as deaths by suicide, which is an issue of contention within the policing community and the family members of deceased police officers.
